JUNGLE BOOK Yarn

The midday sun was blotted out by a massive, moving shadow as Hathi, the wild master elephant, stepped into the clearing. Beside him stood Akela, the great lone leader of the Free People. A crisis had come to DK hills, and the entire DK elite was gathering.

Deep in the jungle bushes , Raksha (Mother Wolf) stood fiercely protective over her cubs. Beside her, Grey Brother, the loyal oldest sibling, growled softly, testing the wind. Mowgli, Baloo, and Bagheera waited quietly as the Gold and Silver Wolves stepped forward to greet the elders.

High above them, a tiny, high-pitched squeak cut through the canopy. It was Mang the bat, dropping down to hang upside down from a branch

"The Red pack led by Shere Khan (The Tiger)—are marching from the south," Mang whistled quickly, his wide ears twitching. "They are stripping the jungle bare. I flew over them; they cross the river bank by nightfall!" [1, 2]

Hathi raised his massive trunk, stamping his foot until the earth trembled. "The Law of the Jungle says we must stand together or fall. But an elephant cannot chase red dogs through the narrow rocky gaps."

"That is work for the Free People," Akela declared from the high boulder, his wise eyes locking onto the Gold and Silver wolves. "We will hold them at the gorge. But we need a strategy to divide their numbers." [1]
Raksha stepped up next to her adoptive son, Mowgli. "My cubs will not fight alone. We will hold the high ridge."

"And I will run at your flank, little brother," Grey Brother said, rubbing his shoulder against Mowgli. [

Mowgli looked at his unique brothers. "The red dogs run blindly in a pack. Silvers, use Mang's eyes to guide you. Lead half of them into the deep shadow of the cavern."

Silver Wolves nodded, slipping into the twilight. With Mang tracking from the sky and whispering the dholes' exact positions from above, Silver Wolves became a ghosts. They teased the front lines of the Red pack, darting into a pitch-black cave. The red pack plunged in after them, completely blind in the dark, while the Silver's night-trained eyes easily guided them safely out through a side escape route, trapping half the enemy inside.

Meanwhile, Gold Wolves stood at the mouth of the main gorge. As the remaining Red Pack charged, the Gold Wolves threw themselves into the path of the setting sun. Their magnificent coat caught the final blazing rays of daylight, throwing a blinding, shimmering reflection directly into the eyes of the attackers.

Confused and temporarily blinded, the Red Pack and Shere Khan broke their formation.
"Fetch them!" Akela howled, leading the pack down from the ridges.
Raksha and Grey Brother leapt into the fray, their jaws snapping in perfect coordination to defend their territory. From the rear, Bagheera struck like lightning, while Baloo used his heavy paws to drive the remaining trespassers back toward the border.

In the process Shere Khan was slipped and fell to his death down the ridge

Seeing the what happend, the rest of the Red Pack turned and fled out of the DK territory forever.

That evening, Hathi raised his trunk in a silent salute of respect to the wolves. Akela sat atop Council Rock with Shere Khans pelt covering it , flanked proudly by Mowgli, Grey Brother, and surrounded by all magnificent Gold and Silver Wolves— and thanked them all for listening to the old wolves and doing their best as all good cubs do
